

Archival Studies Praxis 2025

We build spaces that can grow, be reimaged, and shared

Interpretation

We see architecture as a living process, which can adapt and grow with people. Our work fosters experience over possession.

Direction

We promote adaptive, open-ended design solutions with a conscious footprint.

Ambition

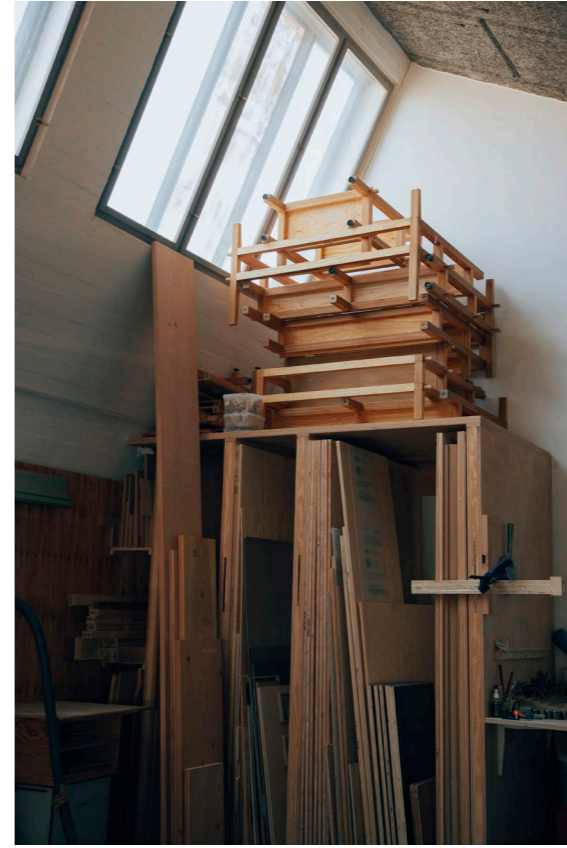

To be part of a generation shaping future standards for responsible architecture, through built work that is both pragmatic and poetic.

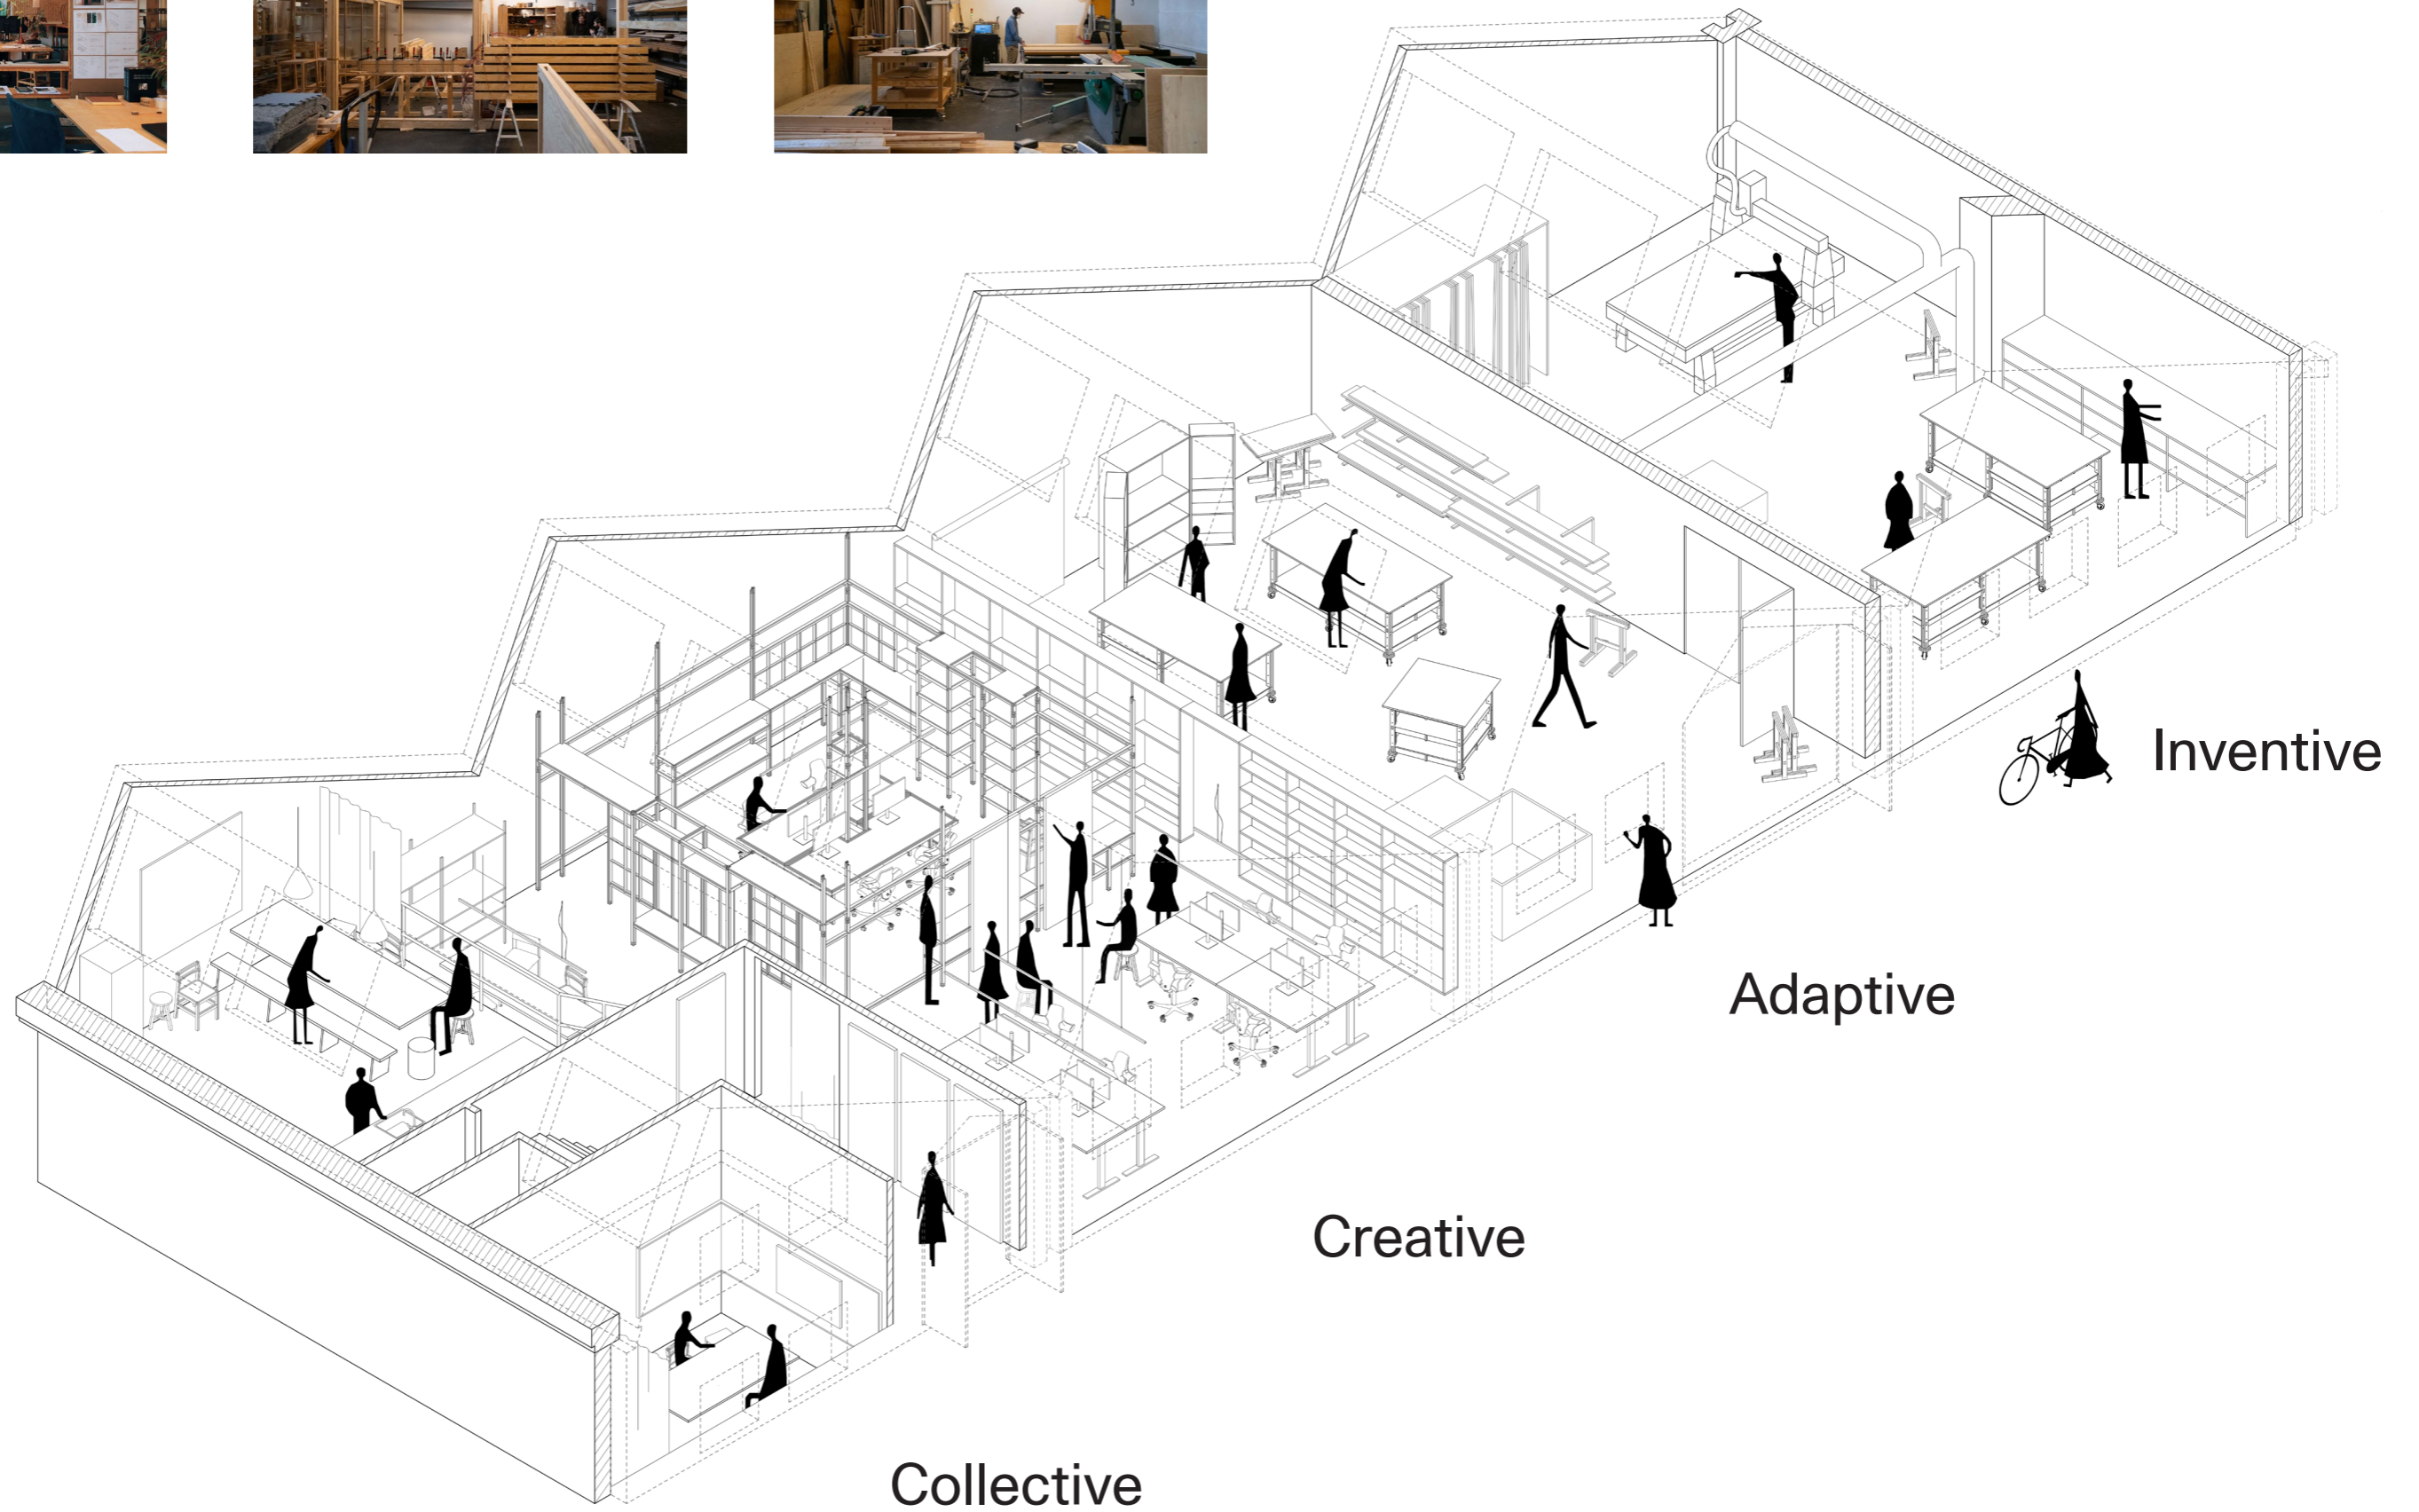

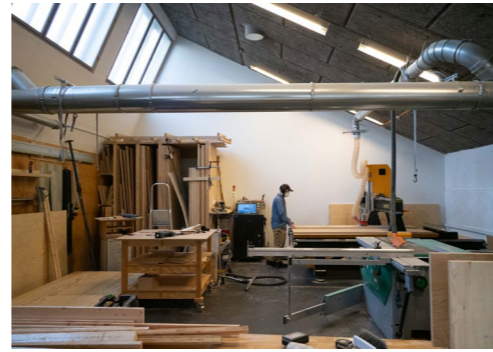

Impact

We enable sustainable transformation, even within the complexities of commercial projects.

We build spaces that can grow, be reimagined, and shared

Praxis

We work across scales and disciplines with the ambition to realize adaptive, meaningful and responsible solutions.

Our approach begins with a contextual analysis and unfolds through prototyping, co-creation, and real-world testing.

By combining traditional craft with digital fabrication, we enable systems that support disassembly and long-term adaptation.

Each project is approached holistically, from detail to social context, always with long-term care, reuse, and repurposing in mind.

We engage clients as active partners, ensuring every solution is tailored, inclusive, and alive.

Established in 2018, Archival Studies is a Copenhagen-based design studio focused on adaptive architecture and its spaces.

We operate from our own hybrid studio and workshop, enabling us to prototype and fabricate in-house while pushing the boundaries of conventional building standards.

Here we are designing not only spaces but inventory, lighting solutions, and structural systems. All with a focus on modularity.

Our commercial projects span from consultancy, concept development, design development, 1:1 prototyping, project management, and construction administration.
